malaya

I see some confusion in some people, Malay and malhaya are two distinct and distinct words are their meanings, in my opinion, Malay is synonymous with hopefully of God, or God will, malhaya is a way of denying before a fact or attitude of his own or others. At least that's what I learned throughout my years between my children and youth there by my village Monteros in the province of Tucumán north of beautiful Argentina :) cordial greetings to all and all here!!!

que me aspen

That I am grieved, means that as is, to be crucified, like fan blades or mills, personally I use it a lot and always related to things that disgust me, said, or done, or when I look at something on tv or hear something that I don't like, worse, something that displeases me too much, then I look at everyone and with a big gesture almost screaming , please follow me!!! I am amused to provoke laughter between my laburo bars, always younger than me and most do not know the term, in fact many of them when some annoying fact happens look at me and say shocked, to grievance me!!! Happy to introduce old terms almost deprecated, greetings to all!!!
